LONG DELAYED RAINS STOP MOUNTAIN FIRES

Showers Tuesday and Wednesday Bring Relief.

DAMAGE BY HIGH WIND

Roof Swept from M. S. Metz Barn at Jacksonville—Nearby Sections Submerged in Cloud of Dust—Fire in Barrens Extinguished.

Heavy and much-needed showers on Tuesday and yesterday brought relief to retarded vegetation and also served to extinguish mountain fires which at some points had been burning fiercely for many days. On Tuesday some sections of Centre County had lots of rain, while at other places there was little rain but a small-sized tornado, instead. Bellefonte was in the latter class and a violent wind storm swept over the town early in the afternoon submerging pretty much of everything in a cloud of dust.

The wind storm caused more or less damage at a number of points. At Jacksonville the wind lifted the roof from a 90 x 100 foot barn owned by M. S. Betz and carried it a distance nearly of fifty feet. The roof of another barn nearby was raised but not torn off.

One blessing resulting from the several showers was the extinguishing of the fires which had been sweeping over the barrens near Scotia and which had traveled across country to the Pennsylvania Railroad tracks at Peru. Large forces of men and State College students had been out for days trying to check the flames, but effectual relief came only with the heavy rains.

$12,500 for Hospital.

An appropriation of $12,500 for the Bellefonte hospital has been recommended by the Appropriation Committee of the Legislature. It is not likely that the Governor will reduce this amount when the bill reaches his desk. The appropriation is $500 less than the amount asked for.

Naturalization Fees to County.

In deciding an action from Schuylkill county the Supreme Court sitting in Philadelphia on Monday declared the Prothonotary could not retain half of the naturalization fees collected by him, but that they must go to the county under the state law.

PENNA. W. C. T. U. MAY TAKE PETRIKIN HALL

Consider Establishing State Headquarters Here.

SUGGESTION INDORSED

Proposed by Mrs. Varney that State Association Assume Indebtedness—Could be Used as General Purposes Building for Women.

Chaplain Varney and his wife, Rev. Mecca Marie Varney, left Bellefonte Tuesday morning for Philipsburg, where they began immediately on their welfare work in that town. Bellefonters who failed to hear these gifted people missed a real treat. The union service Sunday afternoon in the Court House was well attended and a most interesting meeting.

Mr. Varney gave his masterful address on "The Dying Giant", which was said to be, by some of those present, the best temperance address they had ever heard. At this meeting much interest was manifested in Mrs. Varney's proposition to have the State Headquarters of the Penna. Womens' Christian Temperance Union moved to Bellefonte and locate in Petrikin Hall, the state association to lift the three thousand dollar mortgage on the property for the local union, and bring the building into the active W. C. T. U. work for which the donor intended it to be used but which the local union has not been able to do on account of the large mortgage and other indebtedness on the building. A number of those present were so interested, and so heartily in favor of such action that they spoke enthusiastically on the subject. Mrs. Beach talked eloquently on the need of such a building for the women and girls of our and near-by communities, a rest-room for them when they come into town to shop and a place for all the various activities of the woman's club and community welfare interests. Mrs John P. Harris, whose long, patient, most faithful, loving service in the Women's Christian Temperance Union is so deeply appreciated by all who know her, voiced earnestly her relief that the burden she has borne so long might thus be lifted. Her daughter, Mrs. Warfield, also spoke with deep feeling on the subject, saying how pleased she would be should such action be taken. Brief remarks from

The Misery of Being a Boy

His Career, Trials and Tribulations, from Actual Observations.

A great many people think it is a serious thing to be a boy.

Not that it is particularly an unfortunate thing, but just merely a serious, and solemn thing. There are grounds for a wide diversity of opinion on this question. The boy files a long bill of particulars, in which he calls attention to the many ways in which he is imposed on and his life made a burden. He fails to see why he was created to be thus jostled from pillar to post and back again. If he had a stinger like the hornet, or a battery secreted within like the electric eel, he would then imagine he had been placed in this world to have a rough time, and nature, true to her considerate disposition, had provided him with means of defense. The parent comes up to the bar of judgment and flings a bill of particulars and indictments over the rail that is long enough to startle the court. He says he has great difficulty in making both ends meet under the most favorable circumstances. With the boy in the field there is no chance to keep even, because he undoes as fast as is done. What he cannot undo he spoils, and what he cannot spoil is of such little consequence that it would make no appreciative difference if it were spoiled.

This parent will sit on the fence, in the quiet of his office, or behind the wood-shed and meditate, cogitate, and calculate, all about that boy, who is probably at that identical time up to his eyes in mischief. The parent tries to figure out whether or not it would have been better had that boy not been born, or if he had been born a girl. That same boy, whose father is mentally kicking himself may be on that self same wood-shed fishing for the dejected parent's wig with a pinhook. The boy means no harm, but the law of compensation, as he understands it, fully justifies him in using any means for getting even. If not on the wood-shed he may be in the carriage house screwing the carriage wheels on so tight that they will pull to pieces rather than turn. The mother has a soft side for her boy, notwithstanding he sometimes vexes her soul deeply. She looks forward to the time when his boyish chin will be hidden by a manly beard, and when his whining, peevish voice will ring out in clear, shrill notes, commanding attention in the councils of the nation, or on the field of battle, or from the sacred desk. Even when most provoked she will say to herself: "Oh, well; he is only a boy."

As mother sits a'weary, after all have gone to bed, patching the torn pants, which her spouse would have paddled had not the shrewd young philosopher studiously kept his face to the front, she may heave a sigh indicative of weariness. On the contary, the overtime—if mothers are ever allowed overtime—is restful rather than wearisome.

Say, boy, your mother is your friend, and don't you forget it. She may welt you sometimes, but even that is a blessing in disguise. You may not realize just at the time that it is for your good, but it will dawn on you after many years.

Only too often does she allow her tenderness of heart to save your back. She may regret this weakness some time, yet she cannot help pleading with her own judgment in your behalf, and making promises in your own behalf. Thus she keeps going your bail time after time. Is it better to be continually going bail for a boy, or would the effect be more salutary if he were allowed to stand trial and pay the penalty more frequently? The evidence furnished by the police courts tends to show that the wild and vicious, who have the means to promptly pay their fines or have some friend handy to go their bail, rarely profit by being arrested. They put up the necessary forfeit and go forth on another tour, with no intention of appearing before the magistrate in the morning, whereas if they had lain behind the bars all night, or had been compelled by their sureties to stand a hearing, they would probably have had such a realizing sense of their folly as would have done them some good.

On the whole it is probably better to have a hearing in the case, even if sentence is suspended. The town boy has a good case against the world, and one that never fails to arouse the sympathies of the truly philanthropic. He charges that he is grossly imposed upon by mankind in general, just because he is little and not provided with the necessary means of defense. That he is made to bear disproportionate burdens, because so few are able to estimate fairly what amount of strength and energy a boy possesses. That he is regarded as a nuisance in general, and a trial in particular, because at times he gets in the way, and occasionally does something quite exasperating. That he is given no show for his white alley, because so many so-called men neb in and crowd him out. The country boy has a good case also. When corn planting is on the tapis he is expected to drop the pumpkin seeds and beans. One-half of the field is to be pumpkin and the other half bean. He must follow the corn dropper and drop one pumpkin or squash seed in every alternate hill until he comes to the bean line, then drop one bunch bean to the hill, or two string beans in every other hill. He is expected to keep up with an expert corn-dropper, whose feet are protected from the hard clods and sharp pebbles by leather shoes, while his bare feet are not yet sufficiently tanned to be briar and thorn proof. There may even be cracks on their soles or under the toes, or possibly the morning dews may have chapped the tops of them until they bleed, or maybe a nail hanging by a slender shred or sensitive flesh—a souvenir of the first stub of the season—all combine to make every step painful.

When harvest comes he is expected to carry the water for a crowd of perspiring, thirsty harvest hands, gather all the sheaves and fetch the mens' coats from the other end of the field at quitting time. If there is any harder work in the harvest field than this some one stand up and make it known. Hoeing corn is always considered a boy's, but he is usually yoked with one man and two bigger boys. The man invariably takes the lightest and best hoe, and the bigger boys take choices according to size, leaving the "kid" to take the old "gander neck" that is loose in the socket, splintered in the handle and dull as a country parson's sermon.

With all these hindrances he is expected to keep up with the man and does his work just as well. No wonder he is discouraged and often looks at the stars and stripes in hopes of discovering some reasonable excuse for his having been sent to earth. This is bad enough in all conscience, but it is not all. Every time he steps on a sharp clod and shuts his eyes to keep from crying out, he sees saucy, red-gilled chubs leap up from the fishing hole at the end of the field and make faces at him, and lazy shiners turn their glistening sides toward the sun and wiggle their tails in a manner that says, as plainly as words: "I dare you to catch me." Every now and then a big, fat cricket, good at least for two suckers, hops lazily away from him, and nice white grubs, curved the shape of the hook, beckon him to take them in out of the heat.

To gather sheaves or hoe corn with a nice, cool swimming hole within sight, or a bumble bees' nest in the next field, is simply knawing. A man may resist the temptation, but the time was when he would take them in at the cost of a licking. No wonder boys cry out in their sleep and kick the covers off. Can good come out of all this torture of body and agony of soul? There must be some good in it somewhere, else it would not be. The boy who refuses to bend to the burden, to blister his hands on the split-handled rake, to chop wood with the worn-out axe—the good one being under the bed—to ride the sharpest-backed and roughest trotting horse on the farm without even a sheep-skin, and to wait until the second or third table is through eating before his turn comes, never amounts to much. He is like unhammered iron—lacking the qualities of roughness and flexibility. In short, he is like pot metal to steel. Stick to it my boy, it will all come out in the wash, eventually.

Will You Help State College?

Pennsylvania State College is up against it with the present Legislature at Harrisburg, and unless friends of the good, old school turn in and help there will not be a single dollar appropriated for new buildings in the next two years. In an effort to turn the tide President Sparks has addressed personal letters to Pennsylvanians everywhere urging them to use their influence with members of the Legislature. Scores of friends of Penn State are in Harrisburg this week fighting for the appropriation that means so much, but more help is needed and everybody at home here has an opportunity to join in the movement that may save the day.

This article is written in the hope that our readers will write to friends in other counties asking them to in turn write to members of the Legislature from their respective districts urging a liberal appropriation for Penn State. Centre County's representatives at Harrisburg are all right in the matter. They are and have been doing their part. It is the legislators from other counties who would with-hold needed funds for buildings at State College. They have no grievance against Penn State, but they want the money available for larger appropriations for other institutions. The situation is so critical that we hope every friend of this newspaper will act, and act quickly.

When the State College appropriation bill was reported from committee last week it developed that the amount had been slashed to $900,000, or $325,000 less than the sum allowed two years ago. This means that the appropriation is for maintenance, only. It means that plans for new buildings, for greater expansion, for better facilities to take care of the constantly growing attendance of students must all be abandoned. With State College forging ahead so rapidly that it has stepped into the very front rank of educational institutions in the United States, and now to be suddenly forced to stop this splendid progress would be nothing short of a calamity. It is because of this fact that this newspaper asks you, and every friend you may be able to reach, to intercede along lines that will spread your influence to members of the Legislature from other counties.

The movement to help Penn State is a non-partisan one. Politics has no place or part in it. At the same time the Republican party in its State platform stands committed to a policy of liberal appropriations for State College. This platform pledge must be redeemed. The people assume that the pledge was given in good faith. We believe that it was. Now it is up to the party leaders at Harrisburg to demonstrate that fact. Governor Brumbaugh in his campaign repeatedly committed himself as a firm friend and supporter of Penn State. The people took him at his word. Now it is up to him to make his word good. We have all faith in his sincerity. We firmly believe that in the hour of Penn State's need he will not be found wanting.

No great institution can stand still. It must either go forward or backward. This is the crisis confronting Pennsylvania State College. It must have more buildings if it is not to go backward. You can help in the movement to keep it pushing ahead. That is, you can help if you will. Will you?

Jitney Has Arrived.

The jitney has landed in Bellefonte. The 5c auto hack service, which has been sweeping the country from coast to coast, invaded Lock Haven some weeks ago. Last Saturday the first jitney auto appeared on the streets of Bellefonte. Canvas signs announced its mission, as follows: "Jitney, 5c." While the jitney continues in business persons may travel to any part of town for the small sum of 5 cents.

Stabbing Affray at Gap.

A dispute over a game of cards resulted in a stabbing affray Sunday at Pleasant Gap. Four foreigners were injured, two of them rather seriously. One was viciously stabbed in the neck. Another was cut in the back. A third was stabbed in the leg, while a fourth had an arm broken.

Clean Up Week.

Don't forget that the week of May 10—15 will be clean-up and paint-up week for Bellefonte. A little bit of cleaning and painting will work wonders when everybody in town takes a hand in the process.

PLAN BIG THRILLERS FOR OLD HOME WEEK

Arrangements Under Way for Fine Attractions.

WAR AIRSHIP AT WORK

Demonstrations of Dropping Bombs, Scouting and Racing With Automobiles—Nervo and Little Elsie in High Diving Stunts.

Old Home Week committees have been particularly busy during the past week and as a result rapid progress is being made in plans for entertaining and caring for the big crowd which is expected to be here from July 2d to July 9th. Chairman Conley had his committee on decorations in session on Tuesday evening and with a professional decorator discussed plans for putting streets and buildings in holiday attire during the celebration. Chairman Curtin held a meeting with his finance committee and blocked out the business men and citizens generally preliminary to a thorough canvass for funds. Chairman Wallace is hustling things along with his publicity and advertising committee and plans now under consideration provide for a most elaborate scheme for exploiting the big event.

Popular interest in any such celebration naturally centers upon the amusements, entertainments, etc. to be presented, and judging by the manner in which Chairman Daggett and his committee are handling this feature Old Home Week gives promise of being not only a busy but an especially interesting one. Aside from a general carnival project, which would include numerous small tent shows, Chairman Daggett's committee is figuring on bringing to Bellefonte three of the biggest entertainment features being exhibited anywhere. Each is a thriller in every sense of the word, and if possible all three will be secured. The biggest of the three is an outdoor sensational aviation exhibition. The program for this feature calls for two flights daily of fifteen minutes each, at altitudes from one thousand to ten thousand feet. The exhibition includes illustrations of aerial warfare, such as scouting, dropping of bombs on an especially prepared portable fort, races with automobiles, etc. This feature alone is expensive, but it is figured that it would be a great drawing card and one that would be immensely popular.

Another proposed big feature is "Nervo", probably the most thrilling diving act ever presented. In this stunt a man dives head foremost from a stand 111 feet high and lands on a sloping, broad stand on the ground in such a manner as to escape injury. "Nervo" had a run of eight weeks at the Hippodrome in New York. The third proposed big attraction is "Little Elsie", champion lady high diver. She dives from a seventy foot ladder into a tank containing only sixty inches of water.

In all the big attractions being arranged for, it is planned having them exhibited absolutely free to all.

At the next regular meeting of the Centre County Association in Philadelphia special attention will be called by Secretary Beals to the Old Home Week celebration and members will be urged to attend.

Former students of the old Pine Grove Academy are considering having a reunion of students here during Old Home Week.

Chairman Blanchard has named the following Executive Committee for the celebration:

HOUSE PASSES BILL TO CONSOLIDATE PRISONS

Measure Approved After Once Being Defeated.

BOTH AT BELLEFONTE

Francies Rather Than See Great Project Endangered, Says He is not Aspirant For Warden of Consolidated Penitentiaries.

After first defeating it, the House on Monday night took up and passed what is known as the Hess bill providing for consolidation of the Eastern Penitentiary and the Western Penitentiary and bringing them into the one great industrial prison being established nearby Bellefonte. Consolidation of the two penitentiaries has always been the ultimate purpose, but this requires approval by the Legislature and the Hess bill was drafted. When the bill came up in the House last week it was defeated, mainly through opposition from Philadelphia and nearby counties. This action was subsequently reconsidered and the bill restored to the calendar. Monday night last, it came up again on special order and was passed by a vote of 123 to 62. The bill must still pass the Senate, but prevailing opinion is that the House action foreshadows favorable consideration in the upper branch of the Legislature.

Just as Warden John Francies was the man who evolved the idea of constructing a great industrial prison to replace the Western Penitentiary at Pittsburgh, so he proved to be the one who saved the day at Harrisburg on the proposition to consolidate the two penitentiaries. The Philadelphia opposition to the bill was aggravated somewhat by a fear on the part of friends of Warden Robert McKenty, of the Eastern Penitentiary, that consolidation would force him out of a position. Warden McKenty is immensely popular and is widely experienced in prison management. When this situation became understood Warden Francies authorized members of the Legislature from Allegheny County to announce that he would not be a candidate for the position of warden of the consolidated prisons. Representative Stein, of Allegheny County, speaking to the House, said:

"I am authorized to say by the Warden of the Western Penitentiary, John Francies, that he is not a candidate for the position of Warden of this new penitentiary. We are all for McKenty if he wants the position."

The consolidation bill provides that the plans for the new penitentiary nearby Bellefonte shall be so developed as to make provision for the erection of larger and also more buildings so as to permit the ultimate abandonment of the Eastern Penitentiary at Philadelphia.

Sent to Reformatory.

Joe Wagner last Friday went before Judge Orvis and plead guilty to the charge of robbing the Milesburg Store Co. some weeks ago. He was sentenced to the Huntingdon Reformatory and on Saturday was taken to that institution by Sheriff Lee. Henry Gordon, who recently escaped from jail, was originally arrested for complicity in the store robbery on information furnished by Wagner. Gordon has not been apprehended, and it is believed that by this time he is far away from Bellefonte. Nothing has been learned as to the probable whereabouts of William Lehman, who broke jail with Gordon.

News and Views of Women.

By Julia Catherine Gray.

IF WOMEN STAYED AT HOME.

The only woman on the Wisconsin State Board of Agriculture is an anti. She favored the unusual step taken by the management of the State Fair in forbidding the suffragists to have a tent there, on the alleged ground that the question was "political." When the ingenious suffragists went to the Fair and walked about carrying "Votes for Women" banners, this lady is said to have turned away angrily with the remark that "they ought to have been at home." Thereupon someone made the obvious answer that if all the women had stayed at home the Fair would have lost half its gate relief.

This starts a train of thought as to what would happen to many of our cherished institutions if all the women stayed at home. The schools would have to close, the churches would be left almost empty, every decent theatre would become bankrupt, mills and factories would shut down, hospitals would be left without nurses, libraries would lose half their patrons, philanthropic societies of all sorts would lack a quorum at their board meetings, and every anti-suffrage association in the country would have to disband, because its members had taken to following their own teachings. Perhaps this last result could be endured.

A. S. B.

IF YOU ARE A FARMER

Do you know that for twenty years the farmers of California tried in vain to pass the Torrens land law which would make impossible the extortions of title guarantee companies and would provide for registration and speedy transfer of land? Do you know that last fall, three years after the enfranchisement of women, this law was adopted with a majority of over 100,000, largely by the help of voting women? This was an important measure for California farmers, and no people realized it more than the women. Do you think there is anyone who appreciates your work more than the women who use butter and eggs and flour? Don't you think it is about time that the woman who has been your partner on the farm becomes your partner at the polls?

Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, who spoke in Boston the past week, says that "suffrage should be granted to the suffragists as a reward and be inflicted upon the anti-suffragists as a penalty."

HE IS A CONVERT

A small concrete example sometimes carriers more weight than a large abstract argument. In one of the States where campaigns are now going on for a suffrage amendment, a canvasser the other day was asking all the voters in a certain precinct how they stood, and taking the signature of those who were willing to vote for equal suffrage. Among others, she went to the husband of a prominent anti. He asked her if she could name a single practical disadvantage suffered by the women of that State in consequence of their not having the ballot. The canvasser anwered: "The owner of a laundry in this city is running for alderman. He wants the men in his employ to vote for him, so he is having the toilets on the men's side of his establishment cleaned up and put in order, but he is doing nothing to those on the women's side, though they need it badly."

The gentlemen looked astounded. He said, "Give me the address of that laundry." She gave it; and she left with him one of the suffrage cards. A few days later he sent her the card, signed, with a note saying that he had investigated, and had found the facts to be just as she had reported.

RAILROADS & SUFFRAGE

In every State where a railroad has power in politics, it exerts that power against equal rights for women. This has been proved by experience, in a series of suffrage campaigns. Whether it be the Boston & Maine Railroad in New Hampshire, or the Southern Pacific in California and Oregon, it is equally opposed to woman suffrage.

At first sight, there would seem to be no reason why a railroad should take an interest in this question, one way or the other. But the reason is not far to seek. Dr. Stephen S. Wise has pointed out that every employer of child labor is opposed to votes for women. So is every big industry that is reckless of human life and does not want to be made to take precautions. Every institution that is afraid of humanitarian legislation is afraid of woman suffrage.

CALIFORNIA SENDS BILL TO FATHER

The California Appellate Court has upheld the lower court in the ruling that illegitimate children must be supported by the father. The decision came in a case against an Italian hotel-keeper in San Francisco. A little Italian woman, Agatha Leventini, testified that she had been supporting the child with $20 a month out of a wage of $35 a month. The father, Luigi Gambetta, is said to be eaarning $150 to $200 a month.

Many illegitimate children in California have had to be supported by the State. About $50,000 annually has been spent for such purposes. "In many instances," says the Sacramento Bee "this cost will now fall upon the father."

Women vote in California.

The following was called "A Defeat" by the Antis:

"It was a great victory, considering the odds against us. Nevada is a man's State, practically all mining camps. We had the richest man in the State to fight. He and his henchmen were afraid suffrage would put a ban on gambling and defeat the attempt to repeal the new and stricter divorce law. He was a notorious gambler and owned some of the richest mines in the State, as well as many of the news papers. He declared he would leave the State if we won at the election. Thirty-two of his employees who attended one of my meetings were discharged the following morning.

Nevada became a suffrage state at the last election.

A LONG FIT

The editor of the Wilmington (Del.) Journal does not lack wit. He felt his common sense outraged the other day by the assertion of an anti-suffrage correspondent that the equal rights movement was a mere manifestation of hysteria In reply, the editor points out that Wyoming gave women the ballot in 1869, Colorado in 1893, Idaho and Utah in 1896, Washington in 1910, California in 1911, Kansas, Arizona and Oregon in 1912, Illinois and Alaska in 1913, Montana and Nevada in 1914. The winning of all these States for equal suffrage, he says, "represents a fight extending from 1869 to 1914, or a period of forty-five years. That is a long time for a spasm of hysteria to last, especially when it fails to show one single lapse during that entire time."

Cyrus Townsend Brady fears that woman suffrage will "destroy that fine chivalry that makes a man stand up in a street car. If that is all, let the vote be tendered immediately.

Mrs. Jennie Vail Dead.

Mrs. Jennie Schell Vail, widow of Martin Vail, formerly of Philipsburg, died on Thursday of last week at her home in DuBois, following an illness of a year or more. She was a daughter of the late Max and Jane Reed Schell, early settlers in Bald Eagle valley, and was born at Bald Eagle Furnace, October 20, 1853. She was reared on the parental farm and was married in Tyrone in 1874 to Martin Vail, who was employed by the New York Central railroad as a supervisor. They resided in various towns and cities during Mr. Vail's career, he passing away twenty-four years ago while they lived in Philipsburg. Mrs. Vail later moved to Snow Shoe, where she raised her family of children, and seven years ago moved to DuBois where she has since resided.

She leaves these children: John, of Jersey Shore; Mrs. Agnes Flannigan, of Gillintown; William T., of Snow Shoe; Joseph M., Robert O. and Miss Ella, all of DuBois and Edward F. in the west. She is also survived by two sisters and one brother: Mrs. William McNelis and and Mrs. James McNelis and Joseph Schell, all of Tyrone. The body was taken to Tyrone for interment, the funeral taking place Saturday morning.

Raw Foods.

This is the season when the amateur gardener's eyes are delighted by the rows of summer vegetables that are poking their green leaves above the warm earth. The season for raw foods has already arrived. Lettuce, water-cress, radishes, parsley, cucmbers, leeks, berries and many other toothsome growing things burden the market stalls and tempt the house-wife after the winter menu of canned vegetables.

A certain percent of raw foods is an excellent stimulant to the appetite and a wholesome change at this season of the year. Care should be exercised however, that they are properly cleansed before being eaten, says State Health Commissioner Dixon. Often the laborers in the truck gardens and those who handle the truck before reaching the consumer are careless in the use of dangerous fertilizers and some pick and prepare the vegetables for market who are also careless to a degree that is almost criminal.

All vegetables to be eaten raw and berries, even at the risk of slightly injuring their flavor, should be thoroughly washed before being eaten.

Gardens should be fertilized with care. No night soil should be used on truck gardens from which the produce may be served uncooked. Watercress must not be grown in polluted streams. Watercress from polluted streams often produces epidemics of typhoid fever. Bananas should be thoroughly washed as soon as they come into the hands of the consumer, so that the dirt taken on during transportation will not be conveyed to other edibles.

THE FAITH OF ONE PERSECUTED

1 Samuel 19.—May 2.

Saul's Jealousy of David—Attempts to Injure Him—Frequent Deliverances Superhuman—Satan, Our Great Enemy, Seeks Our Injury—Devotion to God and Righteousness Secures Us Deliverance—Why Such Experiences Are Permitted of God.

"Whoso putteth his trust in the Lord shall be safe."—Proverbs 29:25.

WARS with the Philistines continuing, David was made a regular soldier, with command over a regiment and closely in touch with King Saul. Victory came wherever David was engaged, and King Saul saw the people's admiration turned from himself to David. The sentiment reached a climax when, on the return from a victory, the women came forth singing,

"Saul hath slain his thousands,
But David his tens of thousands!"

Jealousy took full possession of the king, and thenceforth his one purpose seems to have been to destroy David. It was a secret withheld from him that David was already anointed to be his successor. He merely knew that Samuel the Prophet had told him that in consequence of his failure to carry out the Divine instructions regarding the Amalekites, the kingdom would be taken from him and his family and given to another.

Saul Throwing Javelin.

Jealousy is the bitter fruit of selfishness. It unbalances reason, extinguishes happiness, and subjects its possessor to horrible melancholy. It is the most terrible, and the most foolish, manifestation of selfishness. Everyone recognizing it in himself should seek victory through vigilance and prayer.

Saul's Jealousy Was Crafty.

When under control of jealousy, King Saul is described as having an evil spirit from the Lord—more properly, an evil spirit opposite from the Lord's Spirit of kindness, justice, love. Sometimes David could soothe him by skilful playing on a harp; yet he knew the king's treacherous mood, and on two occasions hindered Saul from throwing at him a javelin.

Intent upon drawing him into a quarrel, the king promised David his elder daughter to wife, and then gave her to another. David, however, discreetly commented that he was neither of a sufficiently noble family nor financially able to expect such honors. Another trap was to betroth to him the king's younger daughter, Michal. David again told of his unworthiness and his lack of wealth, whereupon Saul stipulated that her dowry should be the evidence of the killing of a hundred Philistines. No doubt he hoped that David would lose his life; but instead, David killed twice the number and received Saul's daughter.

Finally the king told Jonathan and his courtiers that David must die. Jonathan's sentiment was as loving and brotherly as his father's was cruel, jealous, selfish. It was Jonathan who would lose by David's attainment of the throne. Hence the love of Jonathan has become a proverb.

Jonathan interceded with his father for David. The plea was successful. David again became a member of the royal household, but only for a time. The king was not without noble sentiments, but they were not deep enough to control his life. He was under control of a selfish spirit, which is opposite from the Spirit of God.

Ere long, in a jealous fit the king threw his javelin with deadly aim; but David quickly dodged it. David went to his room; but a guard had been stationed there, instructed that upon coming forth he was to be killed. His wife assisted him to escape by letting him down out of a window.

Two Hundred Lives For a Wife.

Let us now inquire how David's course in killing two hundred human beings for a wife squares with the principles of justice, which the Bible everywhere maintains. First, we must have in mind the difference between being a Jew under the Law Covenant and being a Christian under the headship of Christ. Second, we must remember that the Bible teaches that the penalty of sin is death—not torment after death; that this penalty was justly inflicted upon Father Adam because of his wilful sin; and that his family die because the seeds of death are in us from our birth.

David Escaping Saul.

From this viewpoint, ours is a world of convicts under death-sentence. This accounts for God's permitting various death-dealing circumstances to control—famine, pestilences, cyclones, etc. When we come to see that the same God who justly condemned all through one man's disobedience has made provision for the justification of all through Christ's obedience unto death, we see things in a new light.

David must be judged by the Law under which his nation was placed at Mount Sinai. The Israelites were informed that the Canaanites had allowed their cup of iniquity to come to the full, and that Israel was given that entire land. David, therefore, was carrying out the Divine instruction.

SIGNALS OF DISTRESS

Bellefonte People Should Know How to Read and Heed Them.

Disordered kidneys give many signals of distress.

The secretions may be dark, contain sediment.

Passages are sometimes frequent, scanty, painful.

Backache is often present day and night.

Headaches and dizzy spells may occur.

Weakened kidneys should receive quick help.

Don't delay! Use a special kidney remedy.

Doan's Kidney Pills are for weak kidneys, backache and urinary disorders.

Bellefonte evidence proves their worth.

"I suffered from a dull ache across the small of my back for several weeks," says Mrs. John Mignot, of E. High St., Bellefonte. "At times when I bent over or lifted anything, a sharp pain shot through my back. I had heard of Doan's Kidney Pills and I knew that they were good, so I began taking them, procuring my supply at Parrish's Drug Store. They cured me."

Price 50c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mrs. Mignot had. Foster-Milburn Co., Props, Buffalo, N. Y.

The Case of State College.

(From The Pittsburgh Dispatch)

Wide divergence between the appropriations asked by State institutions and the amounts allotted by the Legislature is usual and natural and does not impugn the motives of either. The case of State College is in point. Some $2,000,000 was asked for this institution at this session. Two years ago it received $1,225,000, of which $375,000 was for buildings and $20,000 for sewerage, leaving $830,000 for maintenance of the college and agricultural experiment station. Four years ago the appropriation was $805,000 of which $200,000 was a deficiency allowance. This session the appropriation has been set at $900,000.

This eliminates any consideration for much-neeeed new buildings. In the past seven years the attendance at State College has multiplied three times despite limitations imposed during the past three years by lack of class and laboratory space, which compelled the refusal of admission to over 200 students each year. The present enrollment is 3,375 students, coming from practically every county in the State. Being a State institution, no tuition fees are charged. The remarkable growth in attendance proves popular recognition of the service performed for the State.

This statement constitutes a strong appeal for State College and its request for a building appropriation. The $2,000,000 asked may be out of the question at this time, but should there not be some concession that will permit needed extensions? State College is in an exceptional position. It has no wealthy, city or constituents to draw upon. And as a State institution it should be properly supported by the State.

OPTION DEFEAT NOT SURPRISING

Result in House Was Expected From Start.

GOVERNOR TO KEEP UP FIGHT

Not Discouraged and Already Making Plans For Two Years Hence—He Was Handicapped by Character of Certain Men Who Supported Issue Through Selfish Motives.

Harrisburg, April 27.—Men who believe in local option declare that the result last week in the house, when the Williams bill met defeat by a vote of 78 for and 128 against, is not going to discourage those who want such a law on the Pennsylvania statute books. Already plans are being made for the 1917 battle, and it is expected to be one of the most strenuous in the long history of Pennsylvania politics.

The wets, though jubilant over the victory against their enemy, nevertheless feel that they must be vigilant and already they have outlined a program to fight the dry element in every legislative district of the state.

Governor Brumbaugh does not feel discouraged at the outcome of the uphill fight he made for local option. In the beginning he counted on securing at least 108 votes, and that the number fell far short of this is naturally disappointing to him. But it will not have the effect of causing him to relax his efforts for the struggle two years hence.

As already stated in these columns, local option never had a chance of passing. A majority of the members of the house were elected to represent the wet interests, and to imagine for a moment that a minority could win over a majority was to imagine something that does not often happen and could not happen under the circumstances existing this year.

To make the situation even more difficult for the governor's plans, a number of scheming politicians, who for years have been trying to destroy the Republican party, decided to lead the local option procession in order that in the event of the bill passing they would gain some of the glory that rightfully belonged to the governor. The caliber of these men and their reputation as political tricksters tended to keep out of the local option camp many who might otherwise have gone into it.

Hundreds of genuine Republicans had no desire to join hands with men who last fall characterized Governor Brumbaugh as insincere, who distributed slanderous literature concerning the entire Republican ticket and who took the lead for local option merely for selfish and scheming purposes. If these fellows had kept out of the fight the governor in all probability would have made a better showing.

There will be no increase in the state constabulary. By a vote of 61 to 165 the Baldwin bill to add 116 men to the present force, with an increase in salary for the members, met defeat in the house. Preceding the taking of the vote there was an acrimonious debate, in which the constabulary was praised and denounced. Representative Maurer, the only Socialist in the house, led the battle against the bill.

Representative Baldwin defended the constabulary, told of the fine work it is doing and said that every year it is unable to handle one-tenth of the requests made upon it. He said that Major Groome is not a Philadelphia liquor dealer, as alleged by Representative Maurer, but merely connected with a wine selling firm, one of the oldest in the Quaker City.

Representative Phillips, of Clearfield, said that the constabulary found the lost daughter of one of his constituents, who everybody believed to be in the hands of white slavers. Following a pathetic recital of the bringing home of this wandering girl by a trooper and the overjoyed family thanking him from the bottom of their hearts, Sullivan, of Allegheny, startled the house by jumping up and asking the members to vote against "this damnable state constabulary." Then Rooney, of Philadelphia, blew out all the proponents of the bill and the bill itself by characterizing the constabulary as nothing more than something patterned after "the Irish police that for untold centuries have been crushing the patriots of the little green isle."

ADJOURNMENT NOW IN DOUBT

Legislature May Not End Work Before June 1.

TWO BIG BILLS STILL PENDING

Child Labor and Workmen's Compensation Measures Yet to Be Acted Upon by Senate—Full Crew Repealer Now In Senate—Plan For Branch Capitol.

Harrisburg, April 27.—It is a good guess that the Pennsylvania legislature does not adjourn on the day fixed by resolution of the house, May 6. Many say that it will be sometime around the beginning of June before the lawmakers decide to fold their tents and leave the capitol. There is plenty to do yet, and from all indications weeks will be required to dispose of the business at hand.

With local option out of the way, interest centers on child labor and workmen's compensation. Both of these bills have passed the house and are now in the senate. They will go through the upper branch in amended form. The fight on the child labor bill in the senate is in regard to the number of hours a week a child should be permitted to work. Advocates of drastic child labor laws have fixed the hours at fifty-one, while the manufacturers and parents of the children want fifty-four and will do everything possible to block any child legislation at this session unless this request is granted.

Governor Brumbaugh stands with the fifty-one hour people. He believes that no child between fourteen and sixteen should work more than that length of time during a week and he is insisting that the Cox bill be put through the senate in the same shape as it passed the house. Manufacturers insist that if the houre are made fifty-one they will be compelled to close their industries to any children under sixteen, and this action would work a great hardship upon thousands of poor people residing in the vicinity of manufacturing establishments.

There is another section in the bill prohibiting any boy under twelve from selling newspapers. This is such a nonsensical provision that the senate is sure to speedily eliminate it. Newspaper publishers are a unit in the opinion that a prohibition on the age of newsboys is unjust.

It is thought that the workmen's compensation and employers' liability bills will not precipitate a fight in the senate comparable with that on child labor. There are but a few points to be straightened out, and when this is done the committee on corporations will start the bills through the upper branch.

An important step in the compensation movement was taken last week when the senate passed the Catlin bill to bring the anthracite miners under the proposed new laws. In the absence of this act the compensation bills would not affect the hard coal miners, who at the present time are not supposed to work for coal companies, but for mine foremen certificated by the state. The operators would be free from any liability for accidents due to negligence on the ground that the negligence was caused by state agents and not by the companies. The bill will now pass the house without serious trouble.

Though there are reports that certain members of the senate who were expected to champion the repeal of the full crew bill have decided to take an opposite stand, it is believed the repealer will go through the upper branch. The house vote greatly surprised members of the railroaders' union, who predicted the overwhelming defeat of the Baldwin bill.

The Vickerman amendment to the act creating the public service commission is making good progress and may go to the governor for his approval or disapproval.

Local Option in 1917.

Harrisburg despatches say that Gov Martin G. Brumbaugh apparently is pleased with the prospects for enactment of a local option law in the next legislative session.

He says he has been informed by men who opposed his local, option policy that they did not think "there would be much difficulty about getting a plank for local option in the next Republican state platform."

The Governor added with a smile that the information had come to him without any inquiry.

When asked about the rumors of a call for an extra session for local option he said that he had nothing to say, but remarked that on the general subject of an extra session "there is nothing to that—yet." He accented the last word, but did not say it meant such action in event of failure to pass a child labor or compensation bill.

Distribute Trees Free.

Over 5,000,000 seedling trees will be available for distribution throughout the State in reforestation work if the plans of the State Forestry Department mature. Governor Brumbaugh has signed a bill providing that young trees shall be distributed free to applicants who agree to look after them and preparations to ship them be made. Heretofore these young trees were sold at cost, but it was believed that better results could be obtained by making them free. The trees are raised in the nurseries of the Forestry Department and under favorable conditions the 5,000,000 mark of last year will be exceeded.

Hottest April Day Recorded.

Sunday, last, was the hottest April day of any on record. At most places in town the thermometer registered about ninety-four, although at some points it reached ninety-six and ninety-seven. Old time residents say they do not recall any year when the month of April brought so little rain as is the case this year.

Agriculture for Teachers.

During the six weeks' summer session for teachers at the Pennsylvania State College, beginning June 28, a course will be given in elementary and secondary agriculture for teachers of country schools. This course will also be offered to high school teachers who contemplate teaching this subject.

There will be laboratory work and daily recitations throughout the session. The course is designed to give work best adapted to high pupils and more mature students in the seventh and eighth years of the country schools.

A course in rural education, including organization, administration, elementary agriculture, nature study, and hand work will also be given. In this work the regular college staff will be assisted by Professor L. H. Dennis, expert in agricultural education of the State Department of Public Instruction.

Considerable attention will be given to the social questions of the country schools, playgrounds, organizations, community work, and the general program of activities. STATE W. C. T. U.

some of the men present emphasized the hearty favor which greeted the proposition. One can readily see the advantage it would be to our town to have an organization of the magnitude of the Penna. W. C. T. U., which now numbers over thirty-seven thousand members, establish its headquarters here.

On Monday afternoon a special meeting of the local W. C. T. U. was called by its president, Mrs. John P. Harris, when Mrs. Varney again presented the matter more fully before a very representative and interested audience. Resolutions were passed inviting the Penna. W. C. T. U. to come to Bellefonte to make Petrikin Hall their headquarters. It was also moved and carried that a committee be appointed by Mrs. Harris and the county president to meet with the State officers and confer upon the necessary business arrangements, at the earliest date possible. At this Monday meeting also some other important business was transacted. At the instigation of Mrs. Varney, two new departments were added to the local union work—Heath and Physical training. Mrs. Brouse and Miss Mary Blanchard were appointed to superintend the Health Department, which will concern itself for the most part with the care and attention to the dental and medical requirements of the school-children. The large physical culture class, started by Mrs. Varney, will be carried on under the superintendency of Mrs. Charles Keichline, assisted by various members of the union, every Friday afternoon at four o'clock in the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium. Bellefonte may justly feel grateful to the Penna. W. C. T. U. who sent the Varneys here, for the good they have done cannot be estimated.

Mr. Steel, a Presbyterian minister of that city where the happy young couple are sight-seeing for a few days after which they will return to Columbia, Tenn., to reside and where the groom is engaged as a government employe in eradicating hog cholera. The bride is a southern lady whom Dr. Fry met while visiting at St. Augustine, Florida, last winter while on his vacation. Dan Cupid attended to the rest. The groom is a son of Dr. and Mrs. W. H. Fry, of Pine Grove Mills, and is a "chip off the old block." Congratulations.

Misnomers of Chemistry.

One of the strangest features of chemistry is the fact that many of the chemical names are misleading and do not describe the articles. Here are a few examples: Oil of vitriol is no oil, neither are oils of turpentine and kerosene. Copperas is an iron compound and contains no copper.

Salts of lemon is the exceedingly poisonous oxalic acid. Carbolic acid is not an acid, but an alcohol. Cobalt contains none of that metal, but arsenic. Soda water has no trace of soda, nor has sulphuric acid of sulphur. Sugar of lead has no sugar, cream of tartar has nothing of cream, nor milk of lime any milk. German silver has no silver and black lead no lead. Mosaic gold is only a sulphide of tin.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Stopping the Idle Talk.

"Pardon my interrupting you, old chap, but really you're wasting your time."

"What's the matter? Aren't you interested in what I'm saying?"

"Not particularly. Besides, it won't accomplish anything."

"I don't understand you."

"It's no use telling me how your boss ought to run his business. Tell it to him or keep still about it."—Detroit Free Press.

HISTORY IN RELICS

There's a Wonderful Exhibit In the National Museum.

A FAMOUS COSTUME DISPLAY.

Besides Uniforms of National Heroes, There Are Nineteen Gowns of the Wives of Our Presidents, Beginning With One of Martha Washington.

A recent report on the United States National museum gives an account of the origin and development of the division of history which will appeal to every American. The first building expressly erected for the National museum was not opened to the public until October, 1881, and from that date until the occupation of the new building, in June, 1911, it contained the greater part of the exhibits. Since the opening of the new building, however, the natural history collections have been removed there, leaving more space in the older building for the extension of the divisions of American history and arts and industries.

The division was originally organized to illustrate the history of the United States from colonial times by exhibiting such relics and memorials of noteworthy personages and events and the domestic life of the country as could be brought together into groups of objects representing the different periods. One striking feature in this connection is the unique American period costume collection of nineteen dresses belonging to the successive hostesses of the White House from the time of Martha Washington to that of a recent administration. These costumes are so exhibited on lay figures as to bring out the full effects of the gowns, although no effort has been made to reproduce the faces of the individuals. Several other dresses and a great number of accessories of apparel, including shawls, shoes, hats and bonnets, gloves, handkerchiefs, combs, fans and jewelry, are also on display.

Among the costumes and uniforms of American men shown are a uniform and dress suit of George Washington, a court suit of General Thomas Pinckney, the court dress and other attire of James Monroe and the uniform coat of General Andrew Jackson, worn at the battle of New Orleans.

Many memorials and relics of George Washington were purchased from the Lewis heirs and deposited in the museum in 1878, which, with sundry additions, now include some 400 objects.

Historical furniture which at one time or another was the property of men of national importance—Lafayette, Jefferson, Putnam, Hamilton, Gansevoort, Cooper and others—is displayed.

Colonial relics deposited by the national society of the Colonial Dames of America fill two large cases.

The printing press used in 1725-26 by Benjamin Franklin when a printer in London is specially interesting on account of its connection with this noted statesman, as well as its historical importance as regards the development of the science of printing.

Models of five sailing vessels connected with the discovery and early history of the United States represent a viking ship, such as the Norsemen used in their supposed early visits to this continent in about 1000 A. D.; the Santa Maria, flagship of Columbus; the Susan Constant, which brought the first permanent English colony to America; the Mayflower of the pilgrims and the United States frigate Constitution.

The war of 1812 and the Mexican war are represented by many swords, pistols, guns, medals, flags, uniforms and accouterments belonging to military and naval officers, among whom are Generals Brown, Ripley, Shields, Magruder, Paul, Morgan, Browne of the United States army, and Captain Lawrence, U. S. N. One of the most valued possessions of the museum is the star spangled banner of Fort McHenry, the inspiration of Key's immortal verses. This historic flag has been backed and repaired by an elaborate process, which insures its permanent preservation.

Associated with the civil war are memorials and mementos of many well known Americans—Lincoln, Grant, Lee, Sherman, Custer, Foote and many others prominent in that great struggle. The extensive Grant collection, occupying four cases, is especially interesting.

Among other prominent officers recalled by various mementos are Macomb, Hancock, Decatur, Perry, Biddle, Porter, Farragut, Wilkes, Phillips, Newcomb, Maury, Rogers and Meigs.

The historical development in science is shown by several individual exhibits illustrating the work of Henry, Morse, Field, Langley, Francis, Bache, Morton, Wharton and Baird, but most of the scientific apparatus is included in the division of mechanical technology.

A Difference.

"I thought they didn't allow waiters to take tips in this restaurant?" said the lawyer at the table.

"We don't, sir," replied the waiter.

"I saw that man at the next table give you a tip just now."

"No, sir, that was not a tip, sir; that was a retainer."—Yonkers Statesman.

The Key Ring.

The key ring symbolizes the old custom of handing over the keys of the house to the woman. This was more often a design used for the wedding ring and occasionally for the betrothal.

Judges in Nonpartisan Column.

Reprinted copies of Senate bill No 531, which proposed to repeal the whole nonpartisan ballot act of 1913 relating to elections of judges and second class city officials, show that it has been amended by the Senate committee on elections to apply only to "judges of courts of record."

The bill was presented by Senator H. A. Tompkins, of Cambria County and was intended as an out and out repealer, but so much objection was made by people in Pittsburgh that the bill was sent back to committee and has turned up so worded as to repeal the nonpartisan act of 1912 "insofar as it relates to judges of courts of record.

The effect of the change would be that after January 1, 1916, all nominations for judges of whatever court of record, including the supreme and superior courts, would be on party tickets. None of the places to be filled in November would be affected.

Found Dead Bodies of Deer.

Since the trout fishing season opened on April 15th, several of the anglers who have been on the upper waters of the streams flowing from the mountains in the northeastern side of Clearfield county report having seen the carcasses of many deer lying in the woods. No less than ten have been reported as seen on the headwaters of Lick Run, Trout Run and Mosquito Creek. Most of the deer appear to be less than a year old. The theory is that the great snows of the past winter caused the deer to die of starvation. Some of the fishermen found the remains of a deer which had been shot. They found hoofs with blood thereon and the blood was rather fresh.

The Exploits of Elaine

A Detective Novel and a Motion Picture Drama

By ARTHUR B. REEVE
The Well-Known Novelist and the Creator of the "Craig Kennedy" Stories

Presented in Collaboration With the Pathe Players and the Eclectic Film Company

SYNOPSIS.

The New York police are mystified by a series of murders of prominent men. The principal clue to the murderer is the warning letter which is sent the victims, signed with a "clutching hand." The latest victim of the mysterious assassin is Taylor Dodge, the insurance president. His daughter, Elaine, employs Craig Kennedy, the famous scientific detective, to try to unravel the mystery. What Kennedy accomplishes is told by his friend Jameson, a newspaper man. Elaine is kidnaped by the Clutching Hand, but is rescued by Kennedy, who has discovered her whereabouts through using third degree methods on one of the crooks.

EIGHTH EPISODE

The Hidden Voice.

"Jameson, wake up!"

The strain of the Dodge case was beginning to tell on me, for it was keeping us at work at all kinds of hours to circumvent the Clutching Hand, by far the cleverest criminal with whom Kennedy had ever had anything to do.

I leaped out of bed, still in my pajamas, and stood for a moment staring about. Then I ran into the living room. I looked about, rubbing my eyes, startled. No one was there.

"Hey—Jameson—wake up!"

It was spooky.

"Where—the deuce—are you?" I demanded.

Suddenly I heard the voice again—no doubt about it, either.

"Here I am—over on the couch!"

I scratched my head, puzzled. There was certainly no one on that couch.

A laugh greeted me. Plainly, though, it came from the couch. I went over to it and, ridiculous as it seemed, began to throw aside the pillows.

There lay nothing but a little oblong oaken box, perhaps eight or ten inches square at the ends. In the face were two peculiar square holes, and from the top projected a black disk, about the size of a watch, fastened on a swinging metal arm. In the face of the disk were several perforated holes.

I picked up the strange looking thing in wonder, and from that magic oak box actually came a burst of laughter.

"Come over to the laboratory, right away," pealed forth a merry voice. "I've something to show you."

"Well," I gasped, "what do you know about that?"

Very early that morning Craig had got up, leaving me snoring. Cases never wearied him. He thrived on excitement.

He had gone over to the laboratory and set to work in a corner over another of those peculiar boxes, exactly like that which he had already left in our rooms.

Half an hour afterward I walked into the laboratory, feeling a little sheepish over the practical joke, but none the less curious to find out all about it.

"What is it?" I asked, indicating the apparatus.

"A vocaphone," he replied, still laughing, "the loud speaking telephone, the little box that hears and talks. It talks right out in meeting, too—no transmitter to hold to the mouth, no receiver to hold to the ear. You see, this transmitter is so sensitive that it picks up even a whisper, and the receiver is placed back of those two megaphone-like pyramids."

He was standing at a table, carefully packing up one of the vocaphones and a lot of wire.

"I believe the Clutching Hand has been shadowing the Dodge house," he continued thoughtfully. "As long as we watch the place, too, he will do nothing. But if we should seem, ostentatiously, not to be watching, perhaps he may try something, and we may be able to get a clue to his identity over this vocaphone. See?"

I nodded. "We've got to run him down somehow," I agreed.

"Yes," he said, taking his coat and hat. "I am going to connect up one of these things in Miss Dodge's library and arrange with the telephone company for a clear wire so that we can listen in here, where that fellow will never suspect."

At about the same time that Craig and I sallied forth on this new mission, Elaine was arranging some flowers on a stand near the corner of the Dodge library where the secret panel was in which her father had hidden the papers for the possession of which the Clutching Hand had murdered him.

She had moved away from the table, but, as she did so, her dress caught in something in the woodwork. She tried to loosen it and in so doing touched the little metallic spring on which her dress had caught.

Instantly, to her utter surprise, the panel moved. It slid open, disclosing a strong box.

Elaine took it, amused, looked at it a moment, then carried it to a table and opened it.

Inside were some papers, sealed in an envelope and marked "Limpy Red Correspondence."

"They must be the Clutching Hand papers!" she exclaimed to herself, hesitating a moment, in doubt what to do.

She seized the telephone and eagerly called Kennedy's number.

"Hello," answered a voice.

"Is that you, Craig?" she asked excitedly.

"No, this is Mr. Jameson."

"Oh, Mr. Jameson, I've discovered the Clutching Hand papers," she began, more and more excited.

"Have you read them?" came back the voice quickly.

"No; shall I?"

"Then don't unseal them," cautioned the voice. "Put them back exactly as you found them and I'll tell Mr. Kennedy the moment I can get hold of him."

"All right," said Elaine. "I'll do that. And please get him as soon as you possibly can."

"I will."

"I'm going out shopping now," she returned, suddenly. "But, tell him I'll be right back—right away."

"Very well."

Hanging up the receiver, Elaine dutifully replaced the papers in the box and returned the box to its secret hiding place, pressing the spring and sliding the panel shut.

A few minutes later she left the house in the Dodge car.

Outside our laboratory, leaning up against a railing, Dan the Dude, an emissary of the Clutching Hand, whose dress now greatly belied his underworld "monniker," had been shadowing us, watching to see when we left.

The moment we disappeared, he raised his hand carefully above his head and made the sign of the Clutching Hand. Far down the street, in a closed car, the Clutching Hand himself, his face masked, gave an answering sign.

A moment later he left the car, gazing about stealthily. Not a soul was in sight and he managed to make his way to the door of our laboratory without being observed.

Probably he thought that the papers might be at the laboratory, for he had repeatedly failed to locate them at the Dodge house. At any rate he was busily engaged in ransacking drawers and cabinets, in the laboratory, when the telephone suddenly rang.

An instant he hesitated. Then, disguising his voice as much as he could to imitate mine, he took up the receiver.

"Hello!" he answered.

His face was a study in all that was dark as he realized that it was Elaine calling. He clenched his crooked hand even more viciously.

"Have you read them?" he asked, curbing his impatience as she unsuspectingly poured forth her story, supposedly to me.

"Then don't unseal them," he hastened to reply. "Put them back. Then there can be no question about them. You can open them before witnesses."

For a moment he paused, then added: "Put them back, and tell no one of their discovery. I will tell Mr. Kennedy the moment I can get him."

Clutching Hand studied for a moment and then grabbed the telephone again.

"Hello, Dan," he called when he got his number. "Miss Dodge is going shopping. I want you and the other Falsers to follow her—delay her all you can. Use your own judgment."

It was what had come to be known in his organization as the "Brotherhood of Falsers." There, in the back room of a low dive, were Dan the Dude, the emissary who had been loitering about the laboratory, a gunman, Dago Mike, a couple of women, slatterns, one known as Kitty the Hawk, and a boy of eight or ten, whom they called Billy.

"All right, Chief," shouted back Dan, their leader, as he hung up the telephone after noting carefully the hasty instructions. "We'll do it—trust us."

With alacrity the Brotherhood went their separate ways.

Elaine had not been gone long from the house when Craig and I arrived there.

"Too bad," greeted Jennings, "but Miss Elaine has just gone shopping and I don't know when she'll be back."

Aunt Josephine greeted us cordially, and Craig set down the vocaphone package he was carrying.

"I'm not going to let anything happen here to Miss Elaine again if I can help it," remarked Craig in a low tone, a moment later, gazing about the library.

"What are you thinking of doing?" asked Aunt Josephine keenly.

"I'm going to put in a vocaphone," he returned, unwrapping it.

"What's that?" she asked.

"A loud speaking telephone—connected with my laboratory," he explained, repeating what he had already told me, while she listened almost awe-struck at the latest scientific wonder.

He was looking about, trying to figure out just where it could be placed to best advantage, when he approached the suit of armor.

"I see you have brought it back and had it repaired," he remarked to Aunt Josephine. Suddenly his face lighted up. "Ah—an idea!" he exclaimed. "No one will ever think to look inside that."

"Now, Mrs. Dodge," he said finally, as he had completed installing the thing and hiding the wire under carpets and rugs until it ran out to the connection which he made with the telephone, "don't breathe a word of it—to anyone. We don't know whom to trust or suspect."

Elaine's car had stopped finally at a shop on Fifth avenue. She stepped out and entered, leaving her chauffeur to wait.

As she did so, Dan and Billy sidled along the crowded sidewalk.

Dan the Dude left Billy and Billy surreptitiously drew from under his coat a half loaf of bread. With a glance about, he dropped it into the gutter close to the entrance to Elaine's car. Then he withdrew a little distance.

When Elaine came out and approached her car, Billy, looking as cold and forlorn as could be, shot forward. Pretending to spy the dirty piece of bread in the gutter, he made a dive for it, just as Elaine was about to step into the car.

Elaine, surprised, drew back. Billy picked up the piece of bread and with all the actions of having discovered a treasure began to gnaw at it voraciously.

Shocked at the disgusting sight, she tried to take the bread away from him.

"I know it's dirty, miss," whimpered Billy, "but it's the first food I've seen for four days."

Instantly Elaine was full of sympathy. She had taken the food away. That would not suffice.

"What's your name, little boy?" she asked.

"Billy," he replied, blubbering.

"Where do you live?"

"With me mother and father—they're sick—nothing to eat—"

He was whimpering an address far over on the East side.

"Get into the car," Elaine directed.

"Gee—but this is swell," he cried, with no fake; this time.

On they went, through the tenement canyons, dodging children and push-carts, stopping first at a grocer's, then at a butcher's and a delicatessen. Finally the car stopped where Billy directed. Billy hobbled out, followed by Elaine and her chauffeur, his arms piled high with provisions. She was indeed a lovely Lady Bountiful as a crowd of kids quickly surrounded the car.

In the meantime Dago Mike and Kitty the Hawk had gone to a wretched flat, before which Billy stopped. Kitty sat on the bed, putting dark circles under her eyes with a blackened cork. She was very thin and emaciated, but it was dissipation that had done it. Dago Mike was correspondingly poorly dressed.

He had paused beside the window to look out. "She's coming," he announced finally.

Kitty hastily jumped into the rickety bed, while Mike took up a crutch that was standing idly in a corner. She coughed resignedly and he limped about, forlorn. They had assumed their parts, which were almost to the burlesque of poverty, when the door was pushed open and Billy burst in, followed by Elaine and the chauffeur.

"Oh, ma—oh, pa," he cried, running forward and kissing his pseudo parents, as Elaine, overcome with sympathy, directed the chauffeur to lay the things on a shaky table.

Just then the door opened again. All were genuinely surprised this time,

By a Sort of Instinct Kennedy Seemed to Recognize the Sounds. "Elaine!" He Exclaimed, Turning Pale.

for a prim, spick and span, middle-aged woman entered.

"I am Miss Statistix, of the organized charities," she announced, looking around sharply. "I saw your car standing outside miss, and the children below told me you were up here. I came up to see whether you were aiding really deserving poor."

She laid a marked emphasis on the word, pursing up her lips. There was no mistaking the apprehension that these fine birds of prey had of her, either.

"Why—wh—what's the matter?" asked Elaine, fidgeting uncomfortably.

"This man is a gunman, that woman is a bad woman, the boy is Billy the Bread Snatcher," she answered precisely, drawing out a card on which to record something, "and you, miss, are a fool!"

There was no combating Miss Statistix. She overwhelmed all arguments by the very exactness of her personality.

Elaine departed, speechless, properly squelched, followed by her chauffeur.

Meanwhile, a closed car, such as had stood across from the laboratory, had drawn up not far from the Dodge house. Near it was a man in rather shabby clothes and a visored cap on which were the words in dull gold lettering, "Metropolitan Window Cleaning company." He carried a bucket and a small extension ladder.

In the darkened recesses of the car was the Clutching Hand himself, masked as usual. He had his watch in his hand and was giving most minute instructions to the window cleaner about something. As the latter turned to go, a sharp observer would have noted that it was Dan the Dude still further disguised.

A few moments later, Dan appeared at the servants' entrance of the Dodge house and rang the bell. Jennings, who happened to be down there, came to the door.

"Man to clean the windows," saluted the bogus cleaner, touching his hat in a way quietly to call attention to the words on it and drawing from his pocket a faked written order.

"All right," nodded Jennings, examining the order and finding it apparently all right.

Dan followed him in, taking the ladder and bucket upstairs, where Aunt Josephine was still reading.

"The man to clean the windows, ma'am," apologized Jennings.

"Oh, very well," she nodded, taking up her book, to go. Then, recalling the frequent injunctions of Kennedy, she paused long enough to speak quietly to Jennings.

"Stay here and watch him," she whispered as she went out.

Jennings nodded, while Dan opened a window and set to work.

Elaine now decided to go home.

From his closed car, the Clutching Hand gazed intently at the Dodge house. He could see Dan on the ladder, now washing the library window, his back toward him.

Dan turned slowly and made the sign of the hand. Turning to his chauffeur, the master criminal spoke a few hurried words in a low tone and the driver hurried off.

A few minutes later the driver might have been seen entering a nearby drug store and going into the telephone booth. Without a moment's hesitation he called upon the Dodge house, and Marie, Elaine's maid, answered.

"Is Jennings there?" he asked. "Tell him a friend wants to speak to him."

"Wait a minute," she answered. "I'll get him."

Marie went toward the library, leaving the telephone off the hook. Dan was washing the windows, half inside, half outside the house, while Jennings was trying to be very busy, although it was apparent that he was watching Dan closely.

"A friend of yours wants to speak to you over the telephone, Jennings," said Marie, as she came into the library.

The butler responded slowly, with a covert glance at Dan.

No sooner had they gone, however, than Dan climbed all the way into the room, ran to the door and looked after them. Then he ran to the window. Across and down the street, the Clutching Hand was gazing at the house. He had seen Dan disappear and suspected that the time had come.

Sure enough, there was the sign of the hand. He hastily got out of the car and hurried up the street. All this time the chauffeur was keeping Jennings busy over the telephone with some trumped-up story.

As the master criminal came in by the ladder through the open window, Dan was on guard, listening down the hallway. A signal from Dan, and Clutching Hand slid back of the portieres. Jennings was returning.

"I've finished these windows," announced Dan as the butler reappeared. "Now, I'll clean the hall windows."

Jennings followed like a shadow.

No sooner had they gone than Clutching Hand stealthily came from behind the portieres.

One of the maids was sweeping in the hall as Dan went toward the window, about to wash it.

"I wonder whether I locked those windows?" muttered Jennings, pausing in the hallway. "I guess I'd better make sure."

He had taken only a step toward the library again when Dan watchfully caught sight of him. It would never do to have Jennings snooping around there now. Quick action was necessary. Dan knocked over a costly Sevres vase.

"There—clumsy—see what you've done!" berated Jennings, starting to pick up the pieces.

Dan had acted his part well and promptly. In the library Clutching Hand was busily engaged at that moment beside the secret panel searching for the spring that released it. He ran his finger along the woodwork, pausing here and there without succeeding.

"Confound it!" he muttered, searching feverishly.

Kennedy, having made the arrangements with the telephone company by which he had a clear wire from the Dodge house to his laboratory, had rejoined me there and was putting on the finishing touches on his installation of the vocaphone.

Every now and then he would switch it on, and we would listen in it as he demonstrated the wonderful little instrument to me. We had heard the window cleaner and Jennings, but thought nothing of it at the time.

Once, however, Craig paused, and I saw him listening more intently than usual.

"They've gone out," he muttered, "but surely there is some one in the Dodge library."

"I listened, too. The thing was so sensitive that even a whisper could be magnified, and I certainly did hear something.

Kennedy frowned. What was that scratching noise? Could it be Jennings? Perhaps it was Rusty.

Just then we could distinguish a sound as though someone had moved about.

"No—that's not Jennings," cried Craig. "He went out."

He looked at me a moment. The same stealthy noise was repeated.

"It's the Clutching Hand!" he exclaimed excitedly.

A moment later Dan hurried into the Dodge library.

"For heaven's sake, Chief, hurry!" he whispered hoarsely. "The Falsers must have fallen down. The girl herself is coming!"

Dan himself had no time to waste. He retreated into the hallway just as Jennings was opening the door for Elaine.

Marie took her wraps and left her, while Elaine handed her numerous packages to Jennings.

Dan watched every motion.

"Put them away, Jennings," she said softly.

Jennings had obeyed and gone upstairs. Elaine moved toward the library. Dan took a quiet step or two behind her, in the same direction.

In the library Clutching Hand was now frantically searching for the spring. He heard Elaine coming and dodged behind the curtains again just as she entered.

With a hasty look about, she saw no one. Then she went quickly to the panel, found the spring and pressed it. So many queer things had happened to her since she went out that she had begun to worry over the safety of the papers.

The panel opened. They were there, all right. She opened the box and took them out, hesitating to break the seal before Kennedy arrived.

Stealthy and tigerlike, the Clutching Hand crept up behind her. As he did so, Dan gazed in through the portieres from the hall.

With a spring, Clutching Hand leaped at Elaine, snatching at the papers. Elaine clung to them tenaciously, in spite of the surprise, and they struggled for them, Clutching Hand holding one hand over her mouth to prevent her screaming. Instantly Dan was there, aiding his chief.

"Choke her! Strangle her! Don't let her scream!" he ground out.

They fought viciously. Would she succeed? It was two desperate, unscrupulous men against one frail girl.

Suddenly, from the man in armor in the corner, as if by a miracle, came a deep, loud voice.

"Help! Help! Murder! Police! They are strangling me!"

The effect was terrific.

Clutching Hand and Dan, hardened in crime as they were, fell back, dazed, overcome for the moment at the startling effect.

They looked about. Not a soul.

Then, to their utter consternation, from the helmet again came the deep, vibrant warning.

"Help! Murder! Police!"

Kennedy and I had been listening over the vocaphone, for the moment nonplused at the fellow's daring.

Then we heard from the uncanny instrument: "For Heaven's sake, Chief, hurry. The Falsers have fallen down. The girl herself is coming!"

What it meant we did not know. But Craig was almost beside himself, as he ordered me to get the police by telephone, if there was any way to block them. Only instant action would count, however. What to do?

We could hear the master criminal plainly fumbling now.

"Yes, that's the Clutching hand," he repeated.

"Wait," I cautioned, "someone else is coming!"

By a sort of instinct he seemed to recognize the sounds.

"Elaine!" he exclaimed, paling.

Instantly followed, in less than I can tell it, the sounds of a suppressed shuffle.

"He has seized her—gagged her," I cried in an agony of suspense.

We could now hear everything that was going on in the library. Craig was wildly excited. As for me, I was speechless. Here was the vocaphone we had installed. It had warned us. But what could we do?

I looked blankly at Kennedy. He was equal to the emergency.

He calmly turned the switch.

Then, at the top of his lungs he shouted: "Help! Help! Police! They are strangling me!"

I looked at him in amazement. What did he think he could do—blocks away?

"It works both ways," he muttered. "Help! Murder! Police!"

We could hear the astonished cursing of the two men. Also, down the hall, now, we could hear footsteps approaching in answer to his call for help—Aunt Josephine, Jennings, Marie and others, all shouting out that there were cries in the library.

"The deuce! What is it?" muttered a gruff voice.

"The man in armor!" hissed Clutching Hand.

"Here they come, too, Chief!"

There was a parting scuffle.

"There—take that!"

A loud metallic ringing came from the vocaphone.

Then silence!

What had happened?

In the library, recovering from their crock of surprise, Dan cried out to the Clutching Hand. "The deuce! What is it?"

Then looking about, Clutching Hand quickly took in the situation.

"The man in armor!" he pointed out.

Dan was almost dead with fright at the weird thing.

"Here they come, too, Chief," he gasped, as, down the hall he could hear the family shouting out that someone was in the library.

With a parting thrust, Clutching Hand sent Elaine reeling.

She held on to only a corner of the papers. He had the greater part of them. They were torn and destroyed, anyway.

Finally, with all the venomousness of which he was capable, Clutching Hand rushed at the armor suit, drew back his gloved fist, and let it shoot out squarely in a vicious solar plexus blow.

"There—take that!" he roared.

The suit rattled furiously. Out of it spilled the vocaphone, with a bang on the floor.

An instant later those in the hall rushed in. But the Clutching Hand and Dan were gone out of the window, the criminal carrying the greater part of the precious papers.

Some ran to Elaine, others to the window. The ladder had been kicked away, and the criminals were gone. Leaping into the waiting car, they had been whisked away.

"Hello! Hello! Hello!" called a voice, apparently from nowhere.

"What is that?" cried Elaine.

She had risen by this time, and was gazing about, wondering at the strange voice. Suddenly her eye fell on the armor scattered all over the floor. She spied the little oak box.

"Elaine!"

Apparently the voice came from that. Besides it had a familiar ring to her ears.

"Yes—Craig!" she cried.

"That is my vocaphone—the little box that hears and talks," came back to her. "Are you all right?"

"Yes—all right—thanks to the vocaphone."

She had understood in an instant. She seized the helmet and breastplate to which the vocaphone still was attached and was holding them close to herself.

Kennedy had been calling and listening intently over the machine, wondering whether it had been put out of business in some way.

"It works—yet!" he cried excitedly to me.

"Elaine!"

"Yes, Craig," came back over the faithful little instrument.

"Are you all right?"

"Yes—all right."

"Thank heaven!" breathed Craig, pushing me aside.

Literally he kissed that vocaphone as if it had been human!

The answer is simply this: For each and every cash purchase that is made at our store during the month of May you will receive a register coupon, showing the amount of your purchase. These coupons will be transferable. You can have your friends help you by them giving you their coupons, or you can help them. To the party redeeming the largest in amount represented by these coupons on Saturday, May 29th, will receive 1st Prize.—a prize which would adorn the finest home in the city. To the second largest amount will receive the 2nd Prize. To the third largest in amount will receive the 3rd Prize, and the next one will receive 4th.

There are no strings, catch schemes or red tape connected whatsoever with the contest. It is simply a matter where one tries to obtain any one of these prizes just by becoming interested in the proposition. Do your buying here duringthe month of May and get your friends todo likewise. Our reputation for fair and square dealing is already established in the County. We carry nothing in stock but what is absolutely reliable, and we always stand ready to refund your money on any unsatisfactory purchase made.

These prizes are on exhibition in our store and we cordially invite you to come and see these valuable gifts, thereby proving to you that it will pay you to get busy at once. This contest, all told, will last one month, beginning Saturday, May 1st, and ending Saturday, May 29th, promptly at 9 P. M. We will also issue cash coupons on all bills paid during the month of May. These coupons will be in your possession the entire month and you will therefore know exactly what amount you have. All coupons issued during the contest will only be good for the contest and will not be redeemed after May 29th, in any manner whatever. On Saturday night, May 29th, there will be an outside representative citizen of our town here to go over your coupons and award the prizes. If there should be anything about the contest that you do not understand, kindly call at the store and we will gladly give you further information.

That we have the largest and most varied stock of Spring and Summer wearing apparel for men, women and children from head to foot and at prices that cannot be equaled, have already had the endorsement of hundreds of people who have visited Bellefonte's largest retail establishment, occupying 5200 square feet of space.

Thanking you for past favors, and now let's all join hands for the grand contest, we remain as ever after your patronage.

Repairing State Highways.

Over 5,500 men are at work on the repair of the main highways of the State and operations are being pushed as rapidly as the men and equipment of the State Highway Department can do it. The work is under way in every county in the State and reports to the department at Harrisburg show that excellent results have been obtained.

Highway Commissioner Cunningham and Chief Engineer Uhler have been in consultation with the Governor regarding the repair work and have arranged with the fiscal authorities for the payments from the motor vehicle license fund. It is improbable that anything will be done regarding contracts for new construction until the appropriations are made, all energies being bent to get the main highways in good condition and to maintain them.

COBLE HEARING MAY 4

Former Pleasant Gap Postmaster to Appear at Sunbury Next Week.

George Coble, the Pleasant Gap postmaster who skipped out because of a shortage in his accounts and who was last week arrested by postoffice inspectors at Newark, N. J., will be given a hearing before United States Judge Witmer at Sunbury on Tuesday, May 4th. Leslie Miller, of Pleasant Gap, who was an intimate friend of Coble, has been subpoenaed by a United States Marshal to appear at the hearing. Postoffice Inspector Daly, who investigated conditions at the Pleasant Gap postoffice following Coble's disappearance will also be a witness. So far as is known there will be no other witnesses. A full account of Coble's arrest and the manner in which he was finally run down by postoffice inspectors, was published in "The Republican" last week.

It is the belief of Coble's friends that he will plead guitly and throw himself upon the mercy of the Court. By so doing he stands a chance for getting off with a light sentence. Those who have known Coble well express the belief that he is not really bad at heart and that a full, frank story of how he happened to go wrong will receive proper consideration at the hands of Judge Witmer. These friends say that Coble's trouble started when he kept receipts from the sale of stamps, and that he was tempted to use this money in having a good time with one or more Lock Haven women of unsavory character. When he realized that he was short in his accounts to the amount of $180 or $200 Coble, his friends say, became frightened and instead of appealing to others to help him make up the shortage concluded that there was nothing left for him to do but to run away. He took with him several hundred dollars in addition and his total shortage amounted to about $600.

LET EVERYBODY HELP

April 26, 1915.

TO THE BELLEFONTE REPUBLICAN:—

Let us all rise to the occasion that confronts us. One of the most famous counties, with its county-seat even more so, is going to hold its first Old Home Week. The name means what it says, and it is a most propitious occasion with the many anniversaries, to make the event more commemorable. Let every Centre Countian from far and near rise to it and meet it with the vim and vigor of our great past. A county that has given the country so many famous men in the past, that holds so much of this great Keystone State's institutions and interests, should still stay at the top notch.

Heart and Home should govern this celebration, not mere mercenary motives. Let one day be histerical and have appropriate talks and papers on our glorious past as well as our prospective futurs—may it reach the same heights. Have a historical pageant, or several of them, having to do first with our many Indian legends—of Logan and Bald Eagle, the famous Indian chiefs who dwelt in this community; with our first great settlers and founders of revolutionary fame, and the manufacturing interests in iron and other things that followed them. Our history is rich, and the talent is here, both in school and out of it.

Some seem to think the time is short. It is never too short for the willing. Nations have been conquered in less time. The world moves much faster now. The globe can be circled in a month. Don't wait on your neighbor; think and act. Write your far-away Centre County people, make them wish to return for the time when all can meet together. Show your patriotism, your co-operation, and that quickly and willingly, and you will do wonders.

CITIZEN.

Welsh Circus Here June 8.

Welsh Bros. big circus will exhibit in Bellefonte on Tuesday, June 8th. George B. Beckley, advance agent for the circus, was in town on Monday attending to preliminary arrangements, such as selecting grounds, advertising, etc. The first bill car will arrive in Bellefonte in the near future. Mr. Beckley is an old-time newspaper man but for some years has devoted his time exclusively to circus work. He knows every phase of the show business, and it is his opinion that the Welsh Bros. circus is better this year than possibly ever before. Howe's London circus has canceled its schedule for exhibiting in Bellefonte on May 8th.

Kunes-Bower.

W. Trevilla Kunes, of Runville, and Miss Clara E. Bower, of Mill Hall, were married on Tuesday of last week at the home of the groom, Rev. S. J. Wilson, pastor of the Runville United Brethren church, officiating. The ceremony was performed in the presence of a few intimate friends of the contracting parties. Miss Addie Resides was the bridesmaid, while Charles Smoyer attended the groom. A delicious wedding supper was served at the Kunes home, which was prettily decorated for the happy occasion. Mr. and Mrs. Kunes will reside at Runville. Their many friends extend congratulations and best wishes.

"Profanity."

The second sermon on profanity, with the topic, "The Holy Name", will be given next Sunday evening in the Lutheran church by the pastor, Rev. W. M. B. Glanding. The subject of the morning sermon will be, "Four New Leaves."

John Bunny Dead.

John Bunny, whose funny pictures have made children and old folks, too, laugh the world over, died on Monday in New York as the result of a general collapse in health suffered several weeks ago. Bunny in moving pictures was a popular idol and attracted attention everywhere. He was 52 years old.
